Carpenter Announces Candidacy

Tim “Rambo” Carpenter of Sewanee has announced that he is a candidate for the Franklin County Commission seat 5.B Franklin County’s general elections on Aug. 2.

Carpenter is seeking the seat vacated by the death of Arthur Knoll. Sherwood Eby is filling the seat now by appointment and is also seeking election to this seat.

In August, the winner of the election will serve the two years remaining on Knoll’s term.

Franklin County, district 5, consists of three precincts: Sewanee, Sherwood and Kyle Springs.

“We are an economy looking to be on a slow rise, I feel it is essential to have a working class leader that is conservative but is looking to move our county forward,” Carpenter said.

“I’m concerned about fixing the schools in our county and making more opportunities for our youth,” he said.

Carpenter is a lifelong Sewanee resident. He works as a sergeant in the Franklin County Sheriff’s department. His public service includes more than 25 years as a volunteer firefighter for the Sewanee Fire Department and a 15-year member of the Sewanee EMS.

Carpenter has completed the petition process so that he will be on the ballot in August. He and Eby are the only candidates that filed for the race, according to Margaret Ottey, at the Franklin County Election Commission office.

For more information about Carpenter, contact The Rev. Dennis Keraz and Sandy Keraz at (423) 857-5820 or the Chaplain’s Office.

Sewanee Market Sold to University

Officials Say Will Remain Market For Now

The University is in negotiations to purchase the Sewanee Market at the intersection of University Avenue and Highway 41-A. And anticipates the closing of the sale to occur on May 15.

The former co-owners, Connie Warner and Mike Reid, listed the market for sale in early April and had a potential buyer. “We went through the process with the lease committee by putting the leasehold up for sale,” Reid said. Although another buyer had been found, Reid said he was told that the University wanted to buy it because “plans for redoing the road had already been sent to the Tennessee Department of Transportation.”

The University has been developing a new campus master plan, part of which includes the Village. In March, consultants from the Project for Public Spaces conducted a series of public meetings about future possibilities. For more information about the entire master plan, go to http://about.sewanee.edu/assets/uploads/2011_SewaneeCampusMasterPlan.pdf.

As with all leaseholds for sale on the Domain, the University has the first right of refusal. The University paid the same sale price as was offered by the potential buyer. Warner and Reid said they received the first installment of the payment on April 19. The remainder of the payment will be on May 15.

The Sewanee Market will continue to operate as is until May 15, when the University becomes the official owner. “The University has purchased the Sewanee Market,” said Parker Oliver, executive director of marketing and communications for the University. “We were several months into a planning process for the Village when the leasehold was offered for sale.”

The market space “is an important part of downtown and is included in the scope of that project,” he said. “By purchasing the leasehold, the University ensures that the space will be seamlessly integrated into the plan. A market is certainly one of the leading options the planners are considering.”

Oliver said it will remain a market for the “foreseeable future.”

Reid said they have been asked to lease the building to keep the market open. He was told that currently there are at least four people who have expressed an interest. “This has been our life, and it is hard to let go,” said Warner. “When you get used to doing something seven days a week, you cannot really see yourself doing anything else. All I know is that we have to sell the business.”

“Just want to tell you,” she added, “if you take beer and cigarette sales out of this business, you might as well bulldoze the place tomorrow.”

The Sewanee Market first opened its doors in 1970 and was originally owned by Horace Mayes. Warner has been working at the business center for the past 15 years. She has been a part of Sewanee’s most successful and long-standing businesses, catering to many needs.

“You could buy fresh tomatoes when they were in season, order legs for a special party or just pick up a jug of milk or a candy bar,” said a local resident. “I can’t imagine the town without the Market.”

Warner bought the market in 1996 from Mayes. Reid opened the Sewanee Market Deli in 1999. He also became co-owner of the market in 2001.

Guzmán Symphony Premiere, “Glorias” Performed Thursday

On Thursday, April 26, the University Choir and the Sewanee Symphony Orchestra will present an evening of new and classic masterpieces. The evening will begin at 7 p.m., with the choir’s performance in All Saints’ Chapel, followed by the orchestra’s performance at 8:30 p.m. in Guerry Auditorium.

The choir will sing “Glorias” by Antonio Vivaldi and by John Rutter, one of the most performed living choral composers, and the orchestra will give the North American premiere of the “Symphonia de los Volcanes” by the contemporary Costa Rican composer Carlos Guzmán. The orchestra will also feature tenor Stephen Smith, a Puccini specialist, singing arias, including one from “La Bohème.”

The University Choir, directed by Robert Delcamp, will perform two settings of the “Gloria.” First will be Vivaldi’s enthusiastic “Gloria,” a setting of the mass text that has enjoyed a surge of popularity in recent years. The Italian composer is known more for instrumental works but also wrote a substantial number of choral works. Rutter’s “Gloria” is one of the English composer’s early works—he was not yet 30 when he wrote it—but it reveals the features that have made his the first name in modern choral composition: brilliant instrumental writing, choral passages at turns vigorous and quiet, infectious rhythms and judicious use of contrapuntal texture. The choir is accompanied by strings, oboe and trumpet for the Vivaldi, and the full complement of organ, percussion and brass instruments in the Rutter.

The Sewanee Symphony Orchestra, directed by Joe Lee, will perform Guzmán’s “volcanic” symphony—which gives musical expression to four of the famous volcanoes in Costa Rica—as well as Puccini arias sung by Stephen Smith, a graduate of Davidson College, has enjoyed an international career in opera, having sung in Europe for a decade and taking roles with numerous American companies. He has been professor of voice at Middle Tennessee State since 1998. The orchestra concert will open on an operatic note with Mozart’s whimsical overture to “The Impresario.”

EARTH WEEK THANK YOU
To the Editor:
I wish to thank all those who made Sewanee’s Earth Week Kickoff Celebration a meaningful experience. I thank Leslie Lyle, director of the CCFP, as well as Jess Wilson, of the Cumberland-Farrar-Farmer Market (CFM). Leslie provided the three films, sage wisdom and enthusiastic support; Jess showcased CFM as well as her farm, along with Lydia Broughous. Thank you, CFM, for helping with the flyers for the event.

Thank you, Lynn Cimino-Hurt, for the delicious foods, and Michael Cimino-Hurt and Cricket and Snail, for the delightful music. I appreciate that Braiz Potter came to play music, as well, and regret that it didn’t work out to do so. Chris Lancaster offered an enlightening education on solar power. Dan Joranko shared information about the Tennessee Climate Action network, and Sarah Vance presented her farm, as well as David Haskell’s new book. Thank you, Leonard Keel, for the organic popcorn and Debbie Welch, for showcasing her candles. And thanks to Ken Smith of the Franklin County High School’s AFJROTC program and his students. If there is anyone I have left out, I beg forgiveness!

Finally, I wish to thank all those who attended and supported my performance on Sunday! The celebration was an excellent way to connect people in the community and share our resources, information and appreciation for the preciousness of life on earth. I hope this tradition of joining together in celebration of our Earth can continue to grow!

Evaluating Non-Tested Grade, Subject Teachers

In the new Tennessee Educator Acceleration Model (TEAM), educators are evaluated based on qualitative (observation) and quantitative (student achievement) measures. Changes have been made throughout the year to this evaluation system, and more changes may be coming.

The qualitative observation counts for 50 percent of the evaluation. This includes any observation on instruction, planning, environment and professionalism. The other 50 percent from the quantitative evaluation for educators is different, depending on grades and classes taught.

For teachers in non-tested grades and subjects (grades 3–12), the quantitative evaluation is based on student academic achievement. Thirty-five percent of the score from the Tennessee Value-Added Assessment System (TVASAS) student growth measure. TVASAS is a statistical method that compares actual growth to a student’s projected growth, or how much a student actually improves. It measures how much students have learned according to the curriculum and how they performed on standardized testing.

For teachers in non-tested grades and subjects, their quantitative evaluation comes from alternate student achievement data selected by the teacher and principal from a list recently acquired specifically for this purpose. The gift of this ease to the Mountain Goat Trail Alliance is one of the final pieces needed to activate plans for the completion of a section of trail from Sewanee to Montague. Future plans call for the trail to run from Cowan to Palmer, traversing long mileage for biking and hiking enthusiasts atop the Cumberland Plateau.

The April 29 event is sponsored by the Edgewood Inn, Shelley and Ward Cammack, Brian Breathard, Mountain Goat Outfitters, Woody’s Bicycles, Jimmy Blyth and Ceder Rock Development. The first phase from Sewanee to St. Andrew’s is complete, and plans are progressing for the next two phases from Sewanee through Montague to Tracy City. This 14-mile section will link communities, their schools, and the Plateau’s natural areas and historic sites.

Event Raises $4,500 for SAS

The St. Andrew’s-Sewanee School Parents’ Council’s first annual golf tournament raised $4,500 for scholarship support. Thanks to the hard work of tournament chair David Foster and the significant support of Willowbrook Golf Club (owned by SAS parents David and Julie Burns), more than 50 participants enjoyed a beautiful day of golf and fellowship.

“The support we received from our golfers and from area businesses was tremendous,” said Foster. Each hole on the course had at least one corporate sponsor. “My hope is to be able to make this an annual event. Willowbrook has reserved the course for the school’s use on Saturday, April 6, 2013. Tournament winners included: First Place – David Burns, Jenna Burns, Jerry Don Thomas and Ben Thomas; 2nd Place – Steve Hartman, Mike Hopkins, Greg Angaych and Bob Mitchell; 3rd Place – Mike Jarrell, Jim Medler, Billy Thomas and Johnny McCormick; Flight Two – 1st Place – Stephen Yarworth, Ricky Meeks, Dale Mooney and Jim Foster; 2nd Place – David Foster, Chris Gipson, Gary Gipson and John Thomas; 3rd Place – Jeff Foster, David Cleveland, Mark Moran and Kenny Banks. Winning teams received gift certificates of $400 ($first place), $200 ($second place), and $100 ($third place).

Each year, St. Andrew’s-Sewanee awards more than $1 million in financial aid to its students in grades 6–12. More than half that money is provided to students from Coffee, Franklin, Grundy, and Marion counties.

Gessell Fellow Talks About Community Relations

Sewanee senior Carrie Ryan will give a presentation, “Are We Being Good Neighbors? An Examination Of The Relationship Between Sewanee and Its Local Communities,” at 4:30 p.m., Tuesday, April 24, in Convocation Hall.

Ryan, who was recently named a Rhodes Scholar, is a cultural anthropology major, president of the student body and a student trustee.

After 10 community engagement classes, three years as a Canale intern, and five semesters of research, Ryan has spent countless hours in our local communities, especially Grundy County. Along the way, two questions repeatedly arose in her mind and research:

1) “What does Sewanee’s relationship with our local communities look like and why?”
2) “How can Sewanee be a better neighbor?”

Ryan seeks to answer both of these questions from her year-long capstone study funded by the Gessell Fellowship in Social Ethics, established by John M. “Jack” Gessell in 2006, provides funding for student-led research projects in social theory or social ethics. Awards alternate yearly between students from the College and the School of Theology.

The first question called for extensive ethnographic research, that had both historical and cultural dimensions, and answering the second question required activism, which involved giving thanks to University employees.

A Coach

In Sewanee, we have all sorts. Coach Brian Stringer was a sort. A sort of fellow who liked and cared for his friends, loved and was proud of his family, played and was passionate about rugby. He was fiercely loyal. His children were all very important part of his life. He loved coaching football. He started coaching rugby football in Sewanee when he first moved here. His first Purple Haze team took the pitch in the fall of 1991. Brian was the sort that once you met him you could not forget him. The first thing I remember about Coach was that he was loud. Not in a boisterous, selfish way, but just full of zest. He was a man of the people. He opened doors for the ladies and never forgot to say, “Thank you.” He was that sort of on his mind, and that did not endeavor to annoy some people. Our first meeting did not go too well. He brought several rugby teams into a restaurant I once owned after a tournament. At the time, Sewanee was not ready for that. They drank beer, sang songs, marched through and around the restaurant, and were a little inappropriate. I grew to like him as a person and as a coach. I came to learn that this football is not American football. They have a code of sportsmanship, a code of gentlemanly conduct. They are on a quest to play some ‘smart and sexy rugby.’

The question around town when he first arrived was “What did Brian do for a living?” Sometimes you would see him with paint on his hands. Sometimes he would work in doors, at 4 p.m., only after completing dinners for some people’s kitchen. Sometimes he would just come in, order a beer and sit down to talk about sports, music, children, whatever.

Brian was actually a world-famous designer of counters and signage. You can still see some of his work in airports all around the world. He won a Guggenheim Award. I never knew that. He did not talk about what he had done in his previous life. What mattered to him was what he was now doing with his life.

A coach is supposed to be able to “transfer knowledge of the game in order to develop skilled athletes.” Coaches introduce you to the sport and how to play. One does you show more than that: how to be confident, how to be a good human being and how important sportsmanship and fair play is on and off the field.

Brian treated his players with respect. He talked to them, not at them. He shared his knowledge of a sport he had always played, even at a professional level with the London Harlequins. The old man would even get out and play with his Purple Haze teams. He gathered his players around a table after most games, and talked and laughed. His players loved and respected him. I believe they would have walked through fire for him if needed. Without too much thought, he would have done the same for them.

Coach died in March 2010. He thought he just had a bad cold, then he realized it was walking pneumonia. A doctor had to give him the bad news. His former occupation dealing with asbestos had “done him in.” Brian was actually a world-famous designer of counters and signage. You can still see some of his work in airports all around the world. He won a Guggenheim Award. I never knew that. He did not talk about what he had done in his previous life. What mattered to him was what he was now doing with his life.

The seniors on this team are some of the last players lucky enough to have had Brian as a coach. I hope they still have the tradition of gathering together around a table, throwing a few “back down their necks” and talking as gentlemen. I hope they have passed on the story of Coach head-butting someone for ungentlemanly conduct.

I know I still miss my friend. As a coach he showed there was something above all else, gentlemanly.”

SAS Varsity and JV Soccer Update

The St. Andrew’s-Sewanee School varsity soccer program hosted regional opponent Ezell-Harding on April 5 and Warren County on April 10. Both matches were tough for SAS but promising. Strong and patient defense from Mpilo Ngon- nane, Michael Ross, captain Zach Bloome, Mitchell Hazard and Joshua Yap forced the teams in the box during both matches. Goalkeeper Ethan Brand had two stellar matches in goal earning him awesome 20 saves against Ezell-Harding and 10 against Warren County.

“Despite the losses (0-3 and 0-4), the boys have found something special that is willing to sacrifice for each other. I am honored and amazed at this.”

Another hard fought match was lined up for the SAS Mountain Lions as they hosted regional opponent Donelson Christian Academy on April 12. In the 6-1 victory, Fallin and Keeble earned two goals, while Hazard, Tanner Zimbwa, Brand and Wilson each added one. Zimbwa, Fletcher and Fields Ford were credited with assists. “It was great to see the boys relax and have fun after all their tireless hours on the field,” said coach Mark Brunton. “It is what we needed.”

They are blooming early this year—like so many other things. The scientific name is Cypripedium acaule.

Soft-shelled Turtle at Lake Eva

Jean Yeatman reports “I was walking along the edge of Lake Eva when I saw a light brown Soft-shelled Turtle. It was as big as a dinner plate and hiding behind a sunken log, watching three large fish. It was stalking the fish for a meal. These turtles have a very long snake-like neck, with which they strike to catch fish. They stay in the water to breathe. They are vicious biters, so hold them at the back of their shell if you pick them up. Soon the fish swam away and the turtle disappeared into the deep.

He must put his books and files back in the car.
And stuff his bags with shirts and shorts and sweaters,
And clean his room and take a load to the dump,
wherever the dump is,
And he hears the notes it down and walks back
To his shirts and sweaters while out of the sky
Is woods, woods.
And the woods reply in their woodsy way that the news
He takes a last walk in the woods: what is the news, woods?
